

Call for Papers

“Teaching Geography in Theory and Practice at University”

Would you like to share and reach a wider community by publishing in RIGEO if you have a paper in Teaching Geography at University?

A message from Prof.. Emilia SARNO, as RIGEO guest editor of Volume 7, Number 2 (August 2017).

The aim of this number of RIGEO is to analyze the teaching of Geography at university courses. Geography is presented at several university courses and is often a fundamental teaching. Scientifically, it would be useful to study at least two main aspects: First one is the teaching of geography at university courses that prepare students to teach geography in primary, secondary and different high schools like academic, vocational or in tourism sciences and economics. Second one is teaching geography at geography department at universities. It includes textbooks, different curricula and courses in different geography departments and the ways of teaching geography at geography departments and related topics...

For this reason, we would welcome works which analyze the main themes and difficulties in the vocational training of an in-service and pre-service of geography teachers, of an expert in the field of tourism or for whom has a degree in economics. Furthermore we would welcome works which focus on how analyzing the educational background of a student that starts a course in geography and, then, how to check the acquired skills. Moreover, it would be useful to know how many credits are dedicated to cartography, laboratory activities, and fieldwork and how they are conducted. However, other proposals will be taken into account as long as they analyze mentioned before.
